Christian Identity in Contemporary Europe

Who are we as Christians in Europe today? Who do we want to be? What is our identity? Is there a common identity of Christians despite different denominations and the differences of the regions East, Central-East and Western Europe?

The biblical character of Peter takes centre stage in our discussion during these days. His identity as a follower of Jesus changed again and again and despite of this (or perhaps because of it?) Jesus Christ mandated him to “tend my sheep”.

What does it mean to be a Christian in our context? What does ‘Christian identity’ mean for a minority church or a majority church?

How can our churches be Church together in a pluralistic world? How does our Christian Identity contribute to being a city on a hill for our societies?

We are going to wrestle with these questions, listen to each other and find common paths together.

The European-Ecumencial Study Course offers Christians from Northern, Southern, Eastern and Central Europe and Great Britain the opportunity to come together for an intensive 10-day meeting. The course is grounded in:

- meeting ecumenically committed men and women from different Christian confessions and churches of Europe – across different nations and all generations;
- coming together and learning from one another;
- enjoying an open and truthful dialogue as well as discussing theological and cultural questions;
- giving and receiving spiritual impulses from different spiritual and liturgical traditions which we pass on to one another.

The conference languages are German and English; translation between these two languages will be provided.

To ensure the success of the study course, participants are expected to be present for the entire duration of the course.
